Dear Sarah,

Have you heard Francisco' story?

After his mother passed away, Francisco fell into depression. The friends he found were alcoholics, in and out of jobs and constantly on the streets. He became one of them.

Then he came to know about Second Mile. He found hope and stability. Now he works part-time at Second Mile through our job training program. And he continues to visit with his friends regularly -- but now as an encourager and a living example of the bright future that is possible for them.

Our hope is for every person we come across to become a leader and person of influence like Francisco.

Food is often the first step* to help our neighbors like Francisco, as we meet with people just trying to survive.

After meeting their basic needs, we encourage individuals to enroll in financial education, job training, English as a Second Language classes or other resources that can bring long-term change.

With your help, Second Mile equips people to grow and use their unique talents.

Thanks for being a part of that!
